

Mulan hears the Emperor's decree:

Mulan, a teenage girl in a Chinese village, learns that one man from each family must join the army.

Mulan's concern for her father

Mulan's father is old and not well, so she worries about his safety if he were to go to war.

Mulan's decision to take her father's place:

Mulan decides to disguise herself as a man and join the army in her father's stead.

Mulan's transformation

Mulan cuts her long hair, puts on her father's robe, and adopts a male identity to appear as a soldier.

Mulan's training and leadership:

Mulan proves her skills and bravery in the army, eventually earning a leadership role and becoming a General.

Mulan's secret and the illness:

Mulan keeps her true identity hidden, but she falls sick along with many other soldiers.

Soldiers' discovery and divided opinions

The truth about Mulan being a woman is revealed, leading to mixed reactions among the soldiers. Some soldiers express anger and want her punished, while others recognize her skills and support her.

Mulan's strategic brilliance

Despite her illness, Mulan devises a plan to successfully defend against a surprise attack, showcasing her tactical expertise.

Victory and recognition

Mulan's strategy leads to a significant triumph, resulting in the enemy surrendering and the end of the war. The Emperor is grateful for Mulan's contributions and offers her a position as a royal adviser.

Mulan's choice and return:

Mulan humbly declines the Emperor's offer and decides to return home to her family. She is welcomed with joy and celebrated as the hero who saved China.